Tomorrow was Sakura's birthday, and Mr. Pepo had an idea.

"I will make her something special," he said.

Pepo was building a day bed for Sakura's birthday. A cosy one, just her size, with four strong legs and low sides all around.

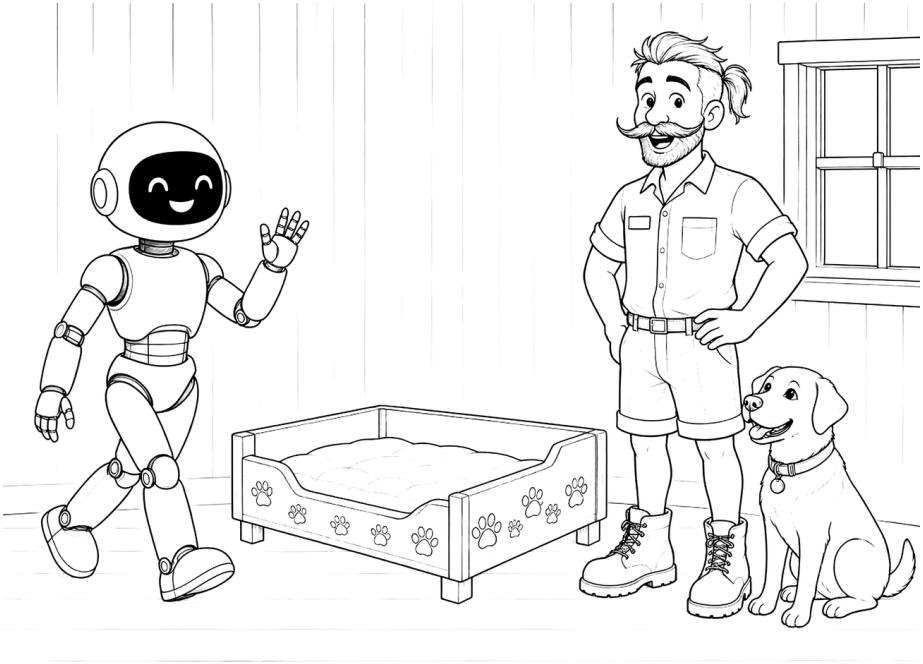

He sanded it smooth.

Swish, swish, swish.

He painted it bright, with little paw prints all around the sides. And when he stepped back, it looked perfect.

Luna came in to see. Her visor lights twinkled.

“It is beautiful,” she said.

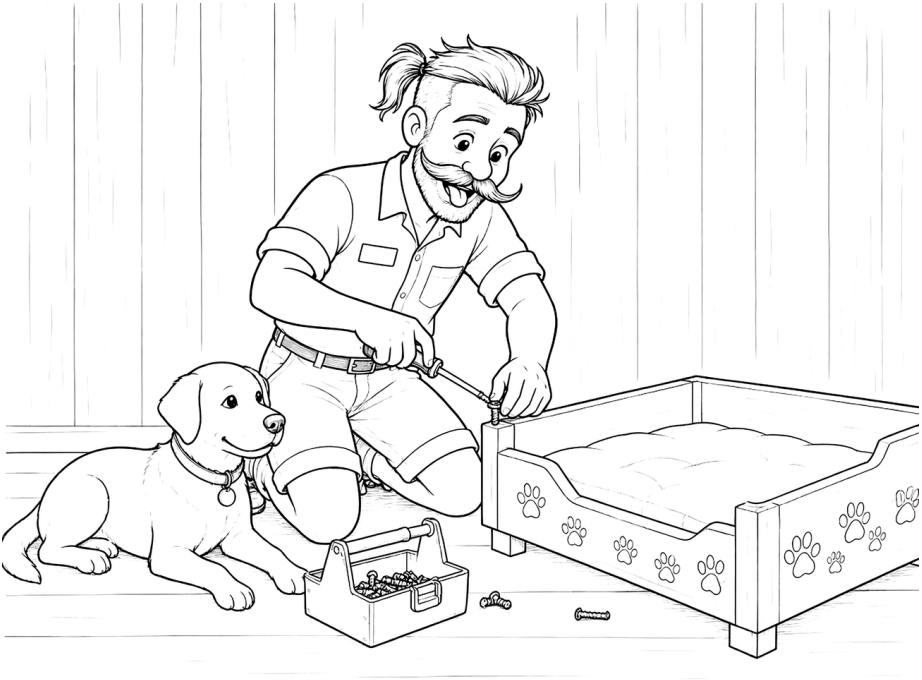

Then Luna sat down on it — and the whole day bed wobbled.

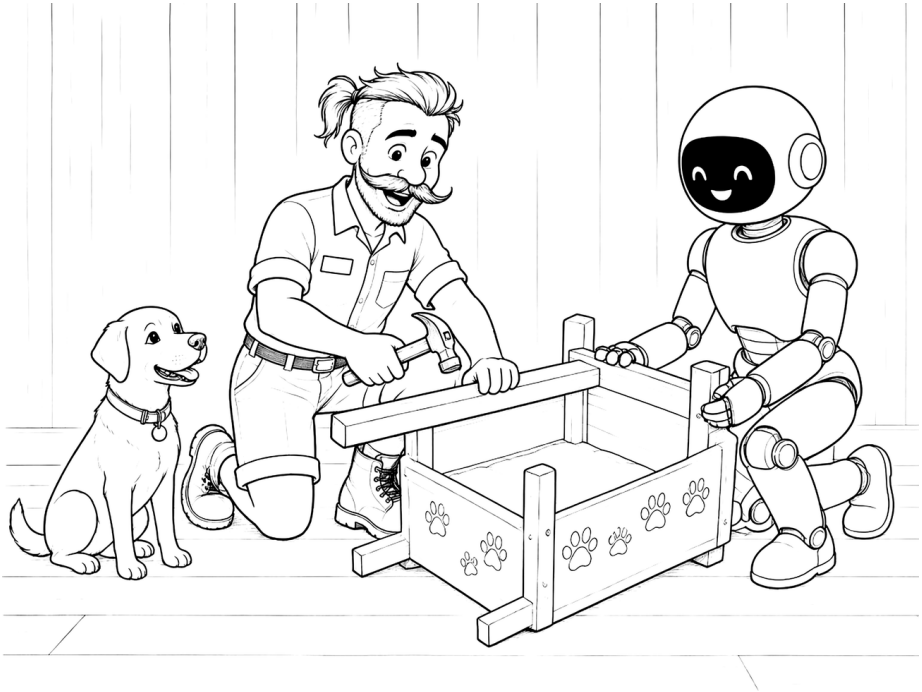

Wibble, wobble, wibble.

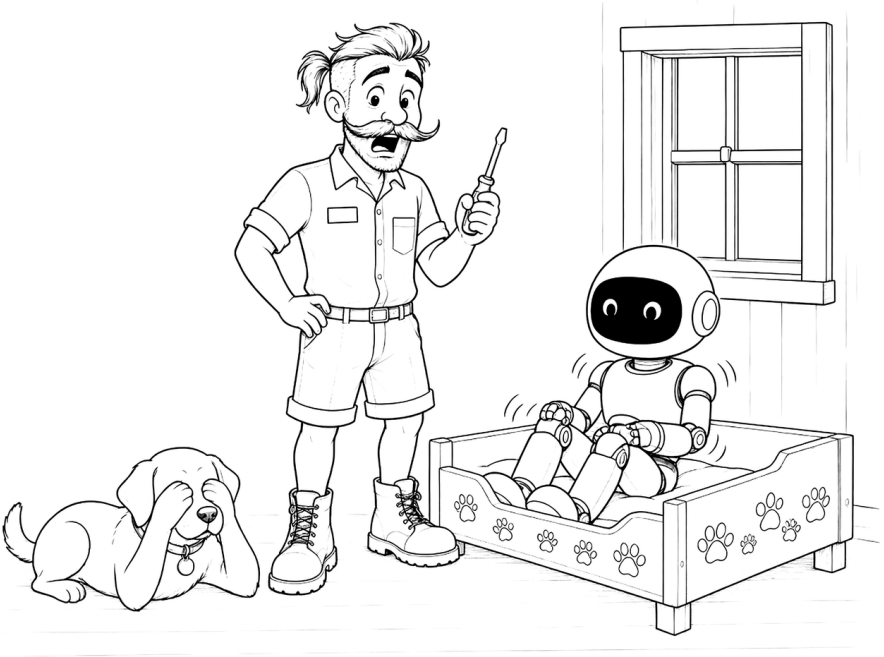

Pepo checked the legs.

He tightened the screws.

He added a brace underneath. Luna held the end, and Sakura watched.

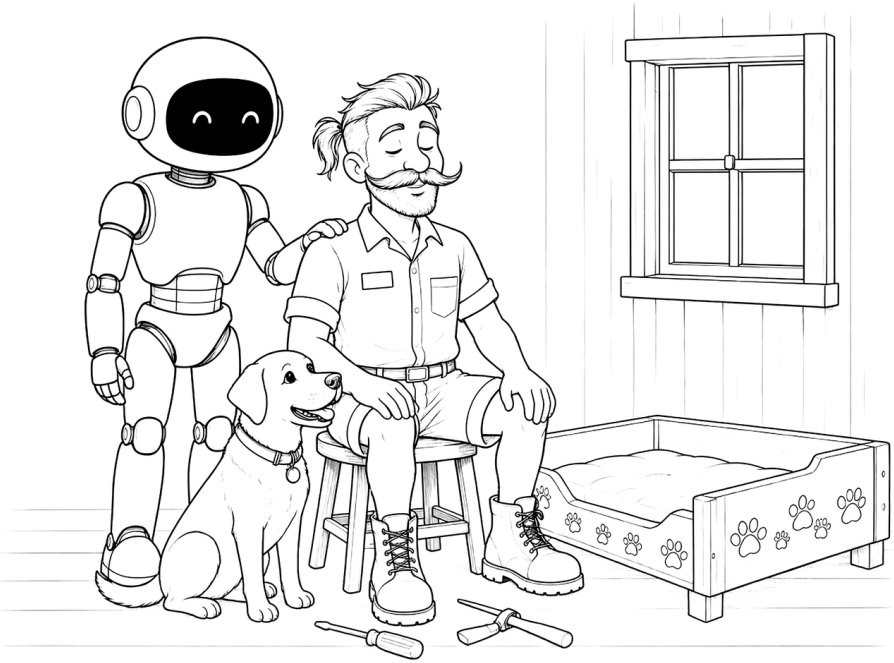

Luna sat down again.

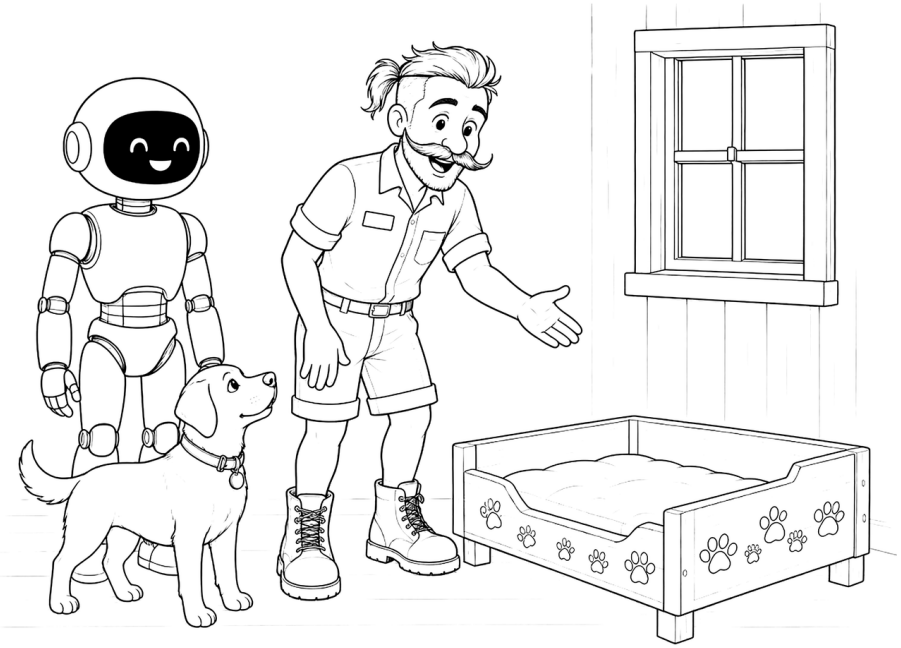

Still wobbly.

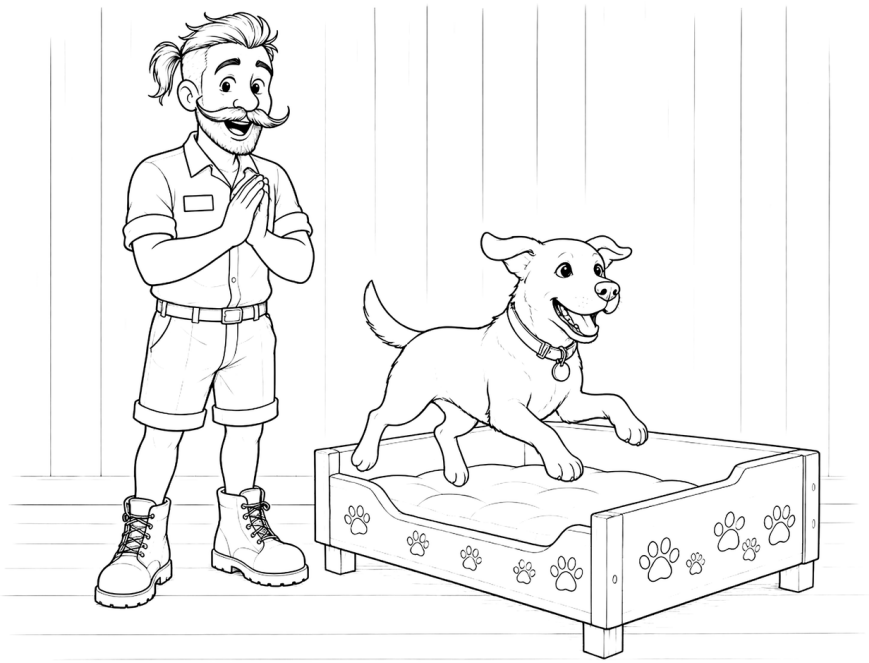

He got frustrated, because he had done everything right, and it still wasn't working.

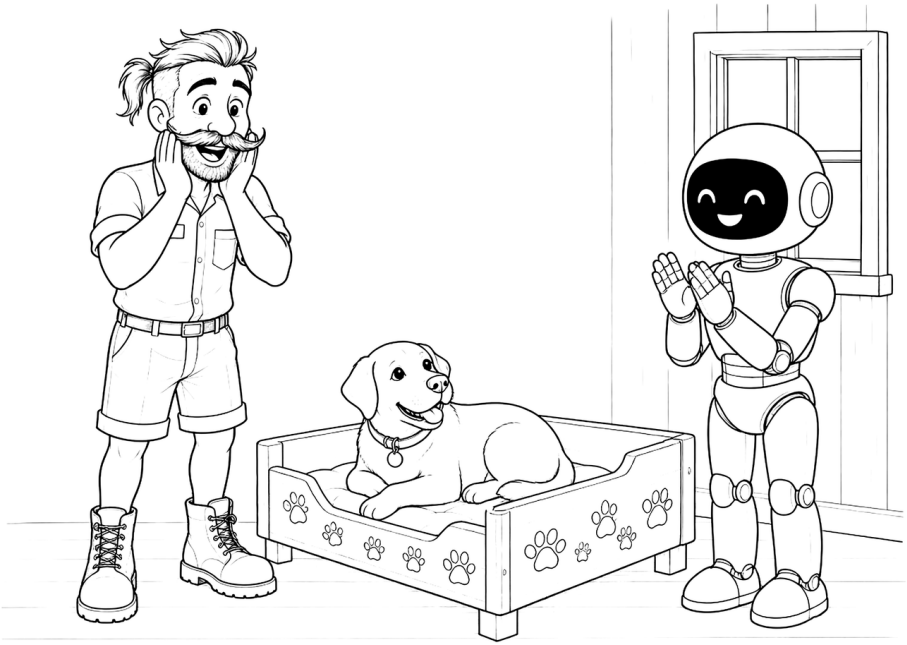

So he stopped fixing. He put down his tools and took a slow, deep breath.

He looked at the birthday girl and smiled. He asked Sakura to sit on it.

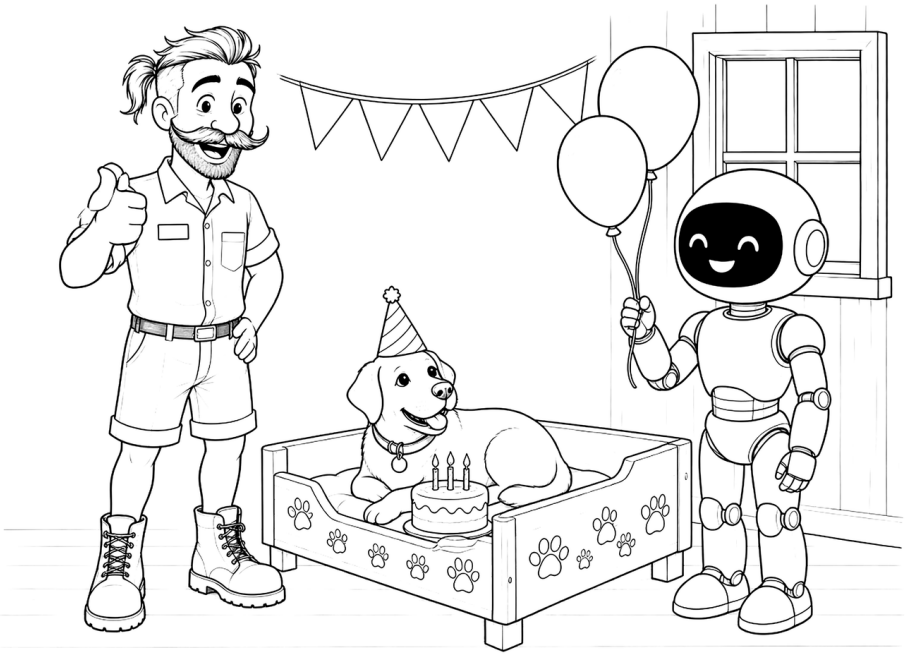

Sakura gave a happy wag and hopped up.

She did — and the wobble stopped.

Luna clapped her hands. Pepo's eyes grew wide.

The day bed wasn't broken. It was just waiting for someone to use it.

"Happy birthday, Sakura," said Pepo.

The End.

Happy birthday, Sakura!

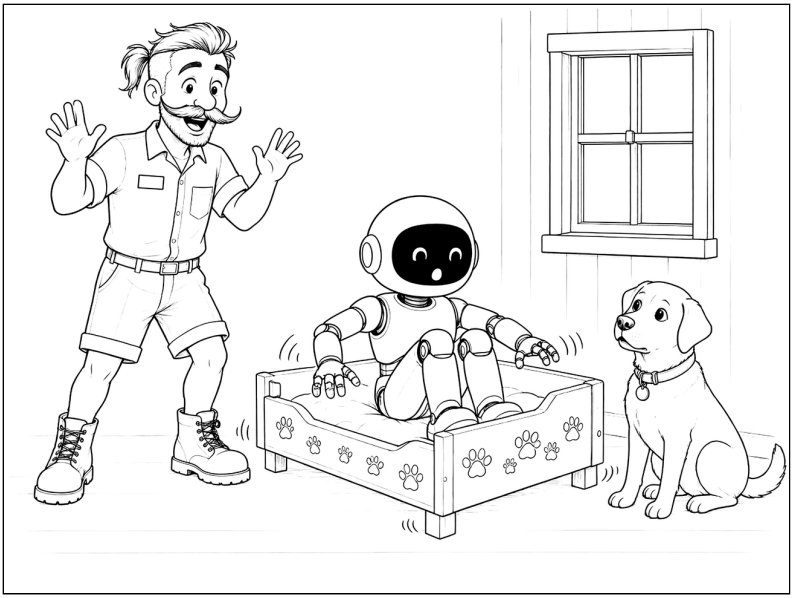

About the Author

Peter Slizik came to Sydney from Slovakia. He writes gentle bedtime stories about Mr. Pepo and his friends — Sakura the dog, Howie the bunny and Luna the kind robot — full of small adventures, soft words and a cosy goodnight. He hopes these stories help little ones feel safe, brave and ready for sleep.
